Improvements in public health during the 20th century have transformed the conditions of human existence. Infectious diseases, maternal mortality and childhood diseases have all significantly decreased. Diseases that once threatened the health and well-being of the public, killing and disabling millions, have been greatly reduced through education, policies, environmental changes, and improved access to health services. While these improvements demonstrate how far we have come, they also illustrate how far we still need to go—especially as they relate to people of color who have not benefited equally from these advances. As we move into the next millenium, public health professionals must continue to work to reduce disparities and improve the health of minorities.

The 2000 Minority Health Conference titled Public Health 2000: Reflections on the Past, Directions for the Future will examine public health practice in this century. The conference goals are:

- To provide a historical perspective on public health work and to identify emerging challenges that public health professionals and communities of color will face in the next millennium.
- To present cutting-edge interventions, research and technology that provide public health professionals with culturally competent tools and strategies that can be utilized to enhance minority health.
- To examine underlying issues within society that influence minority health and inform research, interventions and policy-making.

The Conference Planning Committee invites you to participate in the poster presentation. To do so, you must submit an abstract, via e-mail or by mail, that demonstrates your topic as timely and relevant to the Conference theme. The abstract must be received by January 25, 2000.

Guidelines

Abstracts must be typed, single-spaced and should be no longer than 250 words. The title of the abstract should be centered at the top of the page. The author's name and academic degrees should follow the title. Leave one blank line between the title and the author's name and two blank lines between the author's name and the first line of the abstract. Each abstract should include the following headings: introduction, methods, results and conclusion. All abstracts should be relevant to minority health and one of the concurrent session topics.

If you would like to present a poster, please e-mail your abstract to Yolanda_Riggsbee@unc.edu or submit a typed, original copy by mail. Be sure to include the following information: title of abstract, author's name and academic degrees, author's position/title, mailing address, phone number (including area code), fax number and e-mail address. Abstracts that do not adhere to the above guidelines will not be reviewed.
